Production/processing

Production practices of local farmers such as selecting true, disease-free breed nurtured in net greenhouse and strictly abide to cultivation procedure have contributed in the peculiarity and reputation of Hàm Yên orange.

Link between product and territory

The area has red-yellow soil weathered from shale and magma rock that has the farming floor of over 70 cm thick. The natural fertility is medium to high and water retention is good. All these elements contribute to the growing and development of orange. Annual average rainfall is 1,600 – 1,800 mm, concentrating in the rainy season which helps the plants bear fruits successfully. In the dry season, the humidity, rainfall and temperature are low which are favourable conditions for harvest and blooming and fruit bearing of the next season. Temperature variance between day and night is high resulting in thinner skin than oranges of other regions, the differences in colour and shininess, and the high Vitamin C.
